

A NARROW ESCAPE!

How it Happened.

The following remarkable event in a lady's life will interest the reader. For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which flared up almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I couldn't sleep a night without sitting down and resting but, thinking by the help of New Heart Cure all that was in me and I felt like another woman. Before using the New Heart Cure I had taken different so-called remedies and been treated by doctors without any benefit until I was both discouraged and disgusted. My husband bought me a bottle of Dr. Allen's New Heart Cure, and an hour later I was able to sleep. I felt as if I were a new woman. I weighed 125 pounds when I began taking the remedy, and now I weigh 105. Its effect in my case has been truly marvelous. It has suppressed my other medicine I have ever taken, or any benefit I ever received from physicians. Mrs. Harry Starr, Detroit, Mich., October 12, 1894.

STRUCK BY A TRAIN.

An Engine Runs Into a Football Team at a Crossing.

Three Are Killed and Twelve Are Injured.

GROUND TO PIECES.

Players Hurlled from Wagon and Frightfully Hurt.

SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 30.—This place was the scene of an awful calamity yesterday, resulting in the instant death of three young men, fatally injuring one and seriously injuring twelve others. The Southbridge football eleven was scheduled to play a game with the eleven of the Worcester Polytechnic institute here, and was passing across the tracks of the New York and New England road in a large wagon. When the vehicle was struck by a passenger engine and completely demolished. Its occupants were scattered in every direction, three members of the eleven being killed outright. Some were thrown into the air a dozen feet away, while others went down under the wheels and were ground into a mangled and bleeding mass of flesh with but slight resemblance to human forms.

The train was not brought to a standstill until it had proceeded nearly a mile down the track. The dead and injured lay all over the scene. Charles Gauthier, Victor Nelson, Joseph Cook, fatally injured—Street, quarterback of Williams college eleven, who was to referee the game.

SPRECKELS ASKS MORE.

Protection Not High Enough Yet to Suit the Sugar Trust.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30.—In reference to the Associated Press interview with H. O. Havemeyer, president of the sugar refining company, Adolph Spreckels, director and secretary of the California sugar refinery, said:

"I have read that Havemeyer interview and I understand the exact condition of sugar refining in the western states. Havemeyer and his people control the sugar trade of all the country east of the Missouri river, and the California refinery controls pretty much all west of the river. I think Havemeyer is right when he says that closing his refineries will throw 50,000 people out of work. The reason they are to close is this: They cannot compete with foreign sugars. The administration has effectively shut out the sugar refining business in this country. I don't think the German sugar does in New York at $3.50 per 100 lbs; that leaves a margin of six or six hundredths of a cent per pound on which to pay refinery charges and make a profit. The thing is simply absurd.

In the east they pay refinery hands $1.75 per day. In Germany the wages are $1.15. The trade cannot stand the difference. The German sugar is beet sugar refined abroad. This market is now bringing in a great deal of Chinese sugar that is refined by two English firms in Hong Kong. They use raw sugar from Batavia and the Philippine Islands. Those refineries employ coolies later at 10 cents per day. There is only one remedy and that is protection."

A Brakeman is Crushed Under the Cars at Parsons.

NEWTON, Nov. 30.—Andy Hackney of Highland township has just decided that he wants rental for the use of his well after it has been used for eighteen years by the school children of the district.

Eighteen years ago district school house No. 57 was built diagonally across the road from his home. As his well was convenient to the handful of school children that attended from the district, it was used by them. No objection was made by Mr. Hackney.

The school board recently decided to dig a well for the school house and one was put down at a total cost of $48. Now comes Mr. Hackney with an idea learned of a new school. He will collect rental for the use of the water that the school children have used in eighteen years to quench their thirst. He sues the school board for 10 per cent of the value of the new well and pump for eighteen years, or a total of $80.40.

A PARISIAN DIAMOND TRICK.

The Swindler Substituted an Imitation For a Gem Before the Jeweler's Eyes.

One of the foreign travelers of a famous jewelry house in this city has just returned from his annual trip abroad, and upon reading of a clever shoplifter's trick executed here told of a bold and clever diamond robbery in Paris that borders on high art.

The swindle was perpetrated in a diamond shop on the Rue de la Paix, one of the busiest centers of the trade in Paris. A stranger came in and told the proprietor that he had found a stone among his family effects which had been there a great many years, and the value of which he was anxious to know. He said he didn't suppose it could be worth very much, as otherwise it would not be found among his family possessions. The jeweler took the diamond out of the soiled paper in which the stranger brought it, and examining it closely with a strong glass seemed surprised. Hesitating a moment, he stepped into his private office to show it to another expert. Returning, he said:

"Why, sir, that is not only a good stone, but a remarkably clear one and very valuable."

The stranger laughed incredulously, remarking lightly: "Nonsense; it may be a fine imitation, but certainly not a real diamond, for how could it get into the possession of my family, who were always poor? And how could it lie among our effects undisturbed for so many years?"

The jeweler assured him that it certainly was a diamond and a gem of the first water and added that if the owner would leave it for a day or two he would show the stone to other jewelers and get their opinion. The owner agreed to this and two days later called again. The diamond merchant promptly repeated his assertion as to the purity of the stone and added that it was worth at least 18,000 francs.

"Well," the owner replied, "I can't believe you yet, for I am certain it must be an imitation, no matter how good it looks, but I want to sell it, and if you are willing to buy it, how much will you pay for it and take your chances on the stone?"

"Well, under the circumstances I will give 17,000 francs for the stone," the merchant replied.

"And when can I get the money or your check for it?"

"You may call in a day or two," the jeweler was not a novice in business. Moreover, he was a Parisian of the purest type, and in matters of business was as shrewd as any of his brother merchants in that busy city. He took no chances, and to make doubly sure of his bargain, he put the stranger off again, and in the interval not only removed all possible doubt as to the genuineness of the stone, but also found at least two very willing purchasers at a handsome advance over what he had offered. Therefore when the stranger paid his final visit the jeweler had the stone in his safe and with it a check all filled out. As the jeweler turned to hand the check over to the stranger the latter said, with half a sigh:

"Well, if I must part with it, let me have one last look at it."

The check still lay on the counter as the stranger picked up the paper containing the gem and slowly opened its folds. Then, after a long look, with a heavy sigh, he folded the paper again and handed it back to the jeweler.

As the jeweler started to make out a receipt for the money the stranger said: "Now, it is not very clear in my mind that this can be a genuine stone, and as I am very peculiar about some things please make your receipt read: 'Received for one imitation stone 17,000 francs,' for I can never believe that our family ever possessed anything else."

"That is a strange peculiarity of yours," the jeweler replied, "but I don't know that it makes much difference."

The receipt was made out as the stranger desired, who signed it, and the jeweler deposited the paper containing the stone with the receipt once more in the drawer of his safe.

The following day a friend called, the recent purchase was spoken of, and the paper containing the stone was brought out. As the jeweler took out the stone his face grew pale.

"Mon Dieu!" he cried. "My money, my money!"

The closer he now examined the stone the more evident it grew that the stone was really an imitation after all, and as he sank down in his chair and read the wording of his receipt and then recalled all the circumstances and how the stranger took one last long look at the treasure it became clear to him that in that moment he was robbed and an imitation substituted for the good stone before his very eyes.—New York Sun.

No Comparison. Dr. Dowling of New York was speaking of the incompatibility of a union of church and state in this country. He said:

"Patrick and Biddy had been a long time married, but did not get along well together, for they were almost continually quarrelling. It happened, however, that one day when they were sitting together opposite the fire in came the cat and dog and lay down between them and the fire and also opposite each other. Presently Biddy speaks up and says: 'Faith, Patrick, isn't it a shame we should be always quarrelling? See the cat and the dog, how peaceably they get along.'"

"Och, Biddy, sure, and it isn't a fair comparison at all. Just tie them together and see how they'll act."—Middletown Record.
